

Crime and Justice Research Centre
2013 Annual Report

Centre Director's Report

Since the Crime and Justice Research Centre (CJRC) was launched in December 2012, we have introduced three of the four research themes, established a research journal and hosted an international conference. It has been an energetic, industrious and successful maiden year for the CJRC. The International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy has proven to be a popular and useful tool, bringing together vibrant and relevant research from around the globe. The successful second International Conference of Crime, Justice and Social Democracy welcomed international experts to share their latest findings, build on ideas and challenge concepts. The CJRC has also run a research seminar series and a higher degree research student training program to extend our engagement further into research communities.

In all of this we have been well supported by a highly productive and energetic membership of 23 academic staff and 31 higher degree research (HDR) students. Achievements include:

- 9 published A1 monographs;
- 46 published C1 journal articles;
- 5 successful competitive external grants for a total of $124,502.76;
- 26 published book chapters;
- 20 published conference proceedings;
- 70 National and International presentations;
- 9 HDR students either completed (6) or under examination (3).

Our productivity can also be measured in terms of collegiality, support, teamwork and mentoring. In this capacity I note the considerable number of staff publishing high quality research with their students, the volume of grants applied for in 2013, irrespective of success rate; the large quantity of research articles, books and book chapters published with colleagues in the Centre as well as across the University and beyond; the substantial number of presentations to community and professional groups as well as to academic audiences; the involvement of staff in professional organisations and in the life of the Centre, including attendance at seminars, launches, and training sessions, all attest to the vibrant life of the Centre.

This year we have also been fortunate to appoint three internationally renowned criminologists as members of the Centre: Professor David Brown;

Professor Russell Hogg and Associate Professor Molly Dragiewicz. Their leadership capacity is acknowledged as an important part of our progression in the next Excellence in Research for Australia (ERA) rankings. We are also well served by 19 Adjunct Professors from around the world who are wonderful ambassadors for us.

Of course Centres do not run themselves and in this first year of operation I have been ably supported by Ms Hasting Lai who has been instrumental in the day-to-day functioning of the Centre. As with any new enterprise, ideas, innovations and ways forward are always needed and in this case, have been offered freely and generously by a number of staff in the Faculty of Law, and received gratefully by me. In this regard I would like to acknowledge the support and collegiality of Executive Dean Professor John Humphreys, Assistant Dean Research Professor Reece Walters, Head of School of Justice Professor Kerry Carrington, Director of Research, School of Law Associate Professor Ben Mathews, and Directors of the Health Law Research Centre Professors Ben White and Lindy Willmott.

Professor Belinda Carpenter,
Director
December 2013

Research Theme Leaders

Professor Belinda Carpenter

Professor Carpenter is the inaugural Director of the Centre, appointed in 2012. She also takes responsibility for leadership of the Social, Criminal and Indigenous Justice Theme.

In 2012, she published Sex, Crime and Morality (Routledge) and in 2013, The Politics of Sex Trafficking (Palgrave), both of which continued her longstanding theoretical exploration of the relation between women, sex and criminal behavior. In 2012, Professor Carpenter also published Justice in Society (Federation) which more closely explored the relationship between social and criminal justice for vulnerable and marginalised populations.

In 2004, Professor Carpenter began a research interest in death investigation. In 2004 and again in 2010 she received ARC grants with the Departments of Health, Police and Justice and Attorney General to investigate the decision-making of coroners under the new Coroners Act (2003). The findings from this research have been widely published. Most recently, she has used this expertise to explore the ways in which suicide is determined by Coroners in comparative international research.

Professor Carpenter has also had Ministerial appointments to the Queensland Parole Board, the Higher Education Review Panel, the SOS Queensland Studies Authority. She was also appointed Peer Review Assessor for Excellence in Research for Australia (ERA) rankings in 2012 and is an ARC reviewer for Discovery and Linkage Grant Schemes.

Professor Reece Walters

Professor Walters joined the School of Justice in 2011 and took up the position of Assistant Dean, Research for the Faculty of Law at QUT in early 2012. Professor Walters' research in eco crime and environmental justice; state violence and corporate crime has produced six books and over 100 papers and publications and earned him the Radzinowiz Prize in Criminology. Professor Walter's work has been recognised with other significant awards including the 2005 Carnegie Trust Award.

Professor Walters has held a number of external research and academic offices including executive member of the British Society of Criminology and Convener of the Scottish Branch (2004 – 2007), ESRC Large Grant Assessor (2008-2009) and was also appointed Peer Review Assessor for Excellence in Research for Australia (ERA) rankings in 2012.

In addition to holding positions in research, Professor Walter's work is highly regarded in industry. He has consulted for organisations including Price Waterhouse Coopers and the House of Commons Audit Committee.

Professor Kerry Carrington

Professor Carrington is the Head of School of Justice as well as theme leader of Sex, Gender and Sexuality. She is also Vice Chair of the Division of Critical Criminology, American Society of Criminology; Member of the Division of Women and Crime (ASC), Co-Chief Editor of the International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy, Pacific Rim Editor of Critical Criminology and International editorial board member of the British Society of Criminology's flagship journal – Criminology and Criminal Justice.

Professor Carrington's research interests include girls' violence; mining communities, rural crime and violence; sexual violence and youth justice. Professor Carrington has had two successful ARC grant applications in the last 10 years and has just submitted another ARC Discovery Grant application titled "Girls' Violence and Social Networking". Her forthcoming book is titled "Feminism and Global Justice".

The social and criminological impacts of mining on existing rural communities were published in leading international journals including the British Journal of Criminology, Sociologica Ruralis and The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Criminology. Professor Carrington and her research team won the 2012 Allen Austin Bartholomew Award presented annually by the Australian and New Zealand Society of Criminology for the publication.

Professor Carrington received the American Society of Criminology, Division of Women and Crime Distinguished Scholar Award at the 2013 American Society of Criminology Annual General Meeting in Atlanta Georgia, USA. She was the first Australian academic to win this award.

Professor Geoff Dean

Professor Dean specialises in investigative psychology and policing, criminal/offender profiling, terrorism and international crime. His doctoral research was on the experience of investigation for detectives. Major publications include refereed journal articles on family therapy, child abuse, police education and training, domestic violence, policing by consent, reforming operational policing practices, investigative thinking, criminal profiling, and terrorism, in particular suicide bombers.

He is a member of the Society for Police and Criminal Psychology (SPCP) in America, an honorary member of the Italian Association for Investigative Psychology (AIPI) in Rome, an honorary member of the Institute for Profiling & Criminal Analysis (IPACC) in France, a visiting scholar with the Centre for Teaching and Research in Behavioural Analysis (CERPAC) in France; registered as an international expert with EUROPOL at the Knowledge Management Centre, The Hague in the Netherlands, and consults widely with various police services, institutes, and universities in Asia (Singapore, China), Europe (England, France, Norway, Germany, Italy), and North America (Canada and the US).

Vision

The Crime and Justice Research Centre aspires to be a world leader in high impact criminological research. The distinctiveness of the Centre is its applied research program that focuses on common challenges confronting governments and criminal justice systems around the world, and for which the centre currently has national and international leadership capacity.

Operational Objectives

The Crime and Justice Research Centre aims to be internationally recognised as a world leader in high impact criminological research. The Centre aspires to a world class Excellence in Research for Australia (ERA) rating through the following;

- enhancing high quality research publication outputs, research grant activity and scholarship more broadly;
- collaborating with high quality international research centres and groups to undertake high-impact research of national and global significance for criminal justice policy;
- achieving significant intellectual, public, and practical benefit for the wider public, the scholarly community, our partners, and collaborators; and
- expanding internationalisation and commercialisation of criminological research at QUT.

The Centre's research distinctiveness harnesses four key research themes.

Four Research Themes

Theme 1

Social, Criminal and Indigenous Justice

Led by:
Professor Belinda Carpenter

Our research investigates the gap between the social democratic ideal and the delivery of criminal justice systems, especially for Indigenous Australians who are over-represented in the criminal justice systems of the 'big four' neo-colonial jurisdictions of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the USA. Questions about social justice are also linked to crime control and criminal justice practice. The clearest manifestation of this link is the over-representation of socially marginal populations, ethnic minorities, Indigenous peoples, young people, mentally ill, the poor and the homeless within the criminal justice system. Social democracies operate under the premise that governments will represent the diverse interests of the population, maintaining an ethical and inclusive approach to policy-making in criminal justice and related portfolios. This theme was launched by Mr Mick Gooda, the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Social Justice Commissioner for the Australian Human Rights Commission and was chaired by Dr Mark McMillan from Melbourne Law School on December 5, 2013.

Child Sexual Abuse in the Church

Dr Jodi Death

Child sexual abuse (CSA) in institutions was the subject of three recent public inquiries in Australia. This has reinforced the lobbying of victims for recognition of the harm caused by the mis-management of CSA in institutions, particularly the Catholic Church. Dr Death's research explores CSA in Christian institutions. This includes a mixed method study that surveyed Australian survivors of CSA. Dr Death's most recent work considers the vast data provided by recent public inquiries. This includes a lengthy analysis of submissions to, and transcripts from, the Victorian Inquiry, The Hunter Inquiry and the current Royal Commission. This work is ongoing as the Royal Commission continues.

Theme 2

Eco-Justice, Corporate Crime and Corruption

Led by:
Professor Reece Walters

The crimes of the rich and powerful, especially the corporate elite, pose complex challenges for law enforcement. Most crimes pass unrecognised and undetected, yet can have wide ranging and devastating impacts. White collar crimes such as official corruption, embezzlement and misuse of public funds and resources also present major challenges to governments and law enforcement and compliance agencies, such as the Crime and Misconduct Commission. Attempts to address global warming through carbon credit trading schemes have given rise to new corporate crimes, such as carbon fraud. Environmental crimes such as air pollution, illegal logging and the environmental impact of mining are also emerging problems. The Centre's staff are researching in this space.

Australia's Illicit Tobacco Market

Dr Mark Lauchs

Our research looks at the growers, buyers and sellers in the illegal tobacco market. Tax increases mean that by 2016, the taxed market price of tobacco in Australia will be $25 per packet or $1 per cigarette - the highest prices in the world. This tax is a worthwhile and effective public health policy, however, price rises create an incentive for people to seek cheaper tobacco from an illegal marketplace - a marketplace with an increasing profit margin. We examine the likely shape of this illegal market and the probable players who supply and retail the untaxed tobacco.

Theme 3

Sex, Gender and Justice

Led by:
Professor Kerry Carrington

One of the most prominent and enduring patterns in the criminal justice system relates to sex and gender. The research of these patterns is vital to effective contemporary criminal justice policy. Research in this theme is a distinctive area of growth in criminological research at QUT. The large scale shifts in gender, sex and sexuality and their impact on criminal justice policy, practice and scholarship are key areas of interest. The most significant of these has been the narrowing of the gender gap in offending rates and the rise in crimes of violence attributed to young women across the US, Canada, Europe and Australia.

The Centre proudly launched the gender, sexuality and justice research theme with a symposium on March 1, 2013, featuring two panels on "Women, Families and Mining Communities" and "Young People and Boot Camps". Ms Kelly Veve, councillor from North Queensland's Isaac Regional Council and Ms Donna Bulloch, President of Collinsville Mining Communities United, shared their first hand experiences of living in mining communities. Their presentations can be found on our website. Professor Carrington, who has researched heavily in this area, joined the panel.

Ms Janet Wight from the Youth Advocacy Centre, joined Dr Terry Hutchinson and Dr Kelly Richard who presented insightful panel discussions and question time on the Young People and Boot Camp panel. Both panels provided a neutral platform for the public and representatives from government and non-government organisations to discuss issues in each area.

Queer Criminology

Dr Matthew Ball

Researchers from the CJRC have emerged as international leaders in the field of 'queer criminology'. Dr Ball's groundbreaking theoretical research brings together queer theory and criminology in innovative ways to understand how criminology and criminal justice might become more responsive to the experiences of queer communities. With Dr Angela Dwyer and colleagues from other universities, Dr Ball explores the interactions between LGBTI police liaison officers and queer communities to understand how liaison services are used, and whether they help improve access to justice.

Theme 4

Policing, Security and Intelligence

Led by:
Professor Geoff Dean

Research at QUT aims to improve the quality of practice-based knowledge in policing, security and intelligence while balancing the democratic freedoms expected by citizens. Confidence in the integrity, independence and professionalism of criminal justice systems and their investigative agencies is an essential feature of modern society. With the on-going threat of terrorism, the demand for social democracy, and the elevation of national security concerns, growing tensions between the protection of human rights and global and national security have plagued the contemporary climate of policy-making in law enforcement. This research theme was launched with the Policing Symposium on July 8 2013, just before the Crime, Justice and Social Democracy 2nd International Conference. Professor Dean launched the Symposium with three keynote speakers - Professor Frederick Lemieux from George Washington University, Dr Karl Roberts, Director of Research at the Centre for Policing, Intelligence and Counter Terrorism at Macquarie University, and Professor Tore Bjorgo from the Norwegian Police University College.

Online Fraud Victimization

Dr Cassandra Cross

Dr Cross researches several aspects of online fraud victimisation, which include the stereotypes associated with this crime, how to improve reporting to police, the impact of online fraud, the role of volunteers in providing support services, prevention, and how proactive policing can help. She is working collaboratively with law enforcement bodies across Australia and Canada, as well as other industries, government and academic partners. With Dr Kelly Richards (QUT), Dr Russell Smith (AIC), and the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission, Dr Cross was awarded a Criminology Research grant and in 2014 will embark on the first national study of online fraud victimisation in Australia.

Key Centre Activities

Centre Launch

We welcomed academics, colleagues, industry and the wider community to the Centre launch on December 10, 2012. We were privileged to have two distinguished legal professionals launch the Centre. The Hon. Hal Wootten was the foundation Dean of University of New South Wales (UNSW) Law School, conducted the Royal Commission into Aboriginal Deaths in Custody and was a Federal Court Judge. Emeritus Professor David Brown, also from UNSW, co-launched the Centre.

Speaking at the launch, Mr Wootten highlighted the significant and unique nature of the Centre. His Honour commended the Centre's ambitions, saying they were critical given the global reach of injustice.

The launch was chaired by QUT's DVC (Research) Professor Arun Sharma and attended by staff from across the University as well as a range of industry professionals and organisations.

Appointments

Associate Professor Molly Dragiewicz

Associate Professor Molly Dragiewicz joined the School of Justice and the CJRC from the University of Ontario, Institute of Technology. Associate Professor Dragiewicz has an outstanding international reputation in the field of criminology, having won two awards from the American Society of Criminology. She secured competitive grant funding from the Canadian Social Science and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC), the Canadian equivalent of the ARC and has also been successful in the current SSHRC 2013 round. She has a solid track record of publication in high quality A and A* ranked ERA journals.

Emeritus Professor David Brown

Emeritus Professor David Brown has published across broad areas of criminal law, criminal justice, criminology and penology in Australia and internationally. He is a regular media commentator on criminal justice issues.

Professor Brown taught criminal law, advanced criminal law, criminal justice, crime prevention, community corrections and penology courses at the University of New South Wales in Sydney from 1974 to 2008. He is a co-author of the leading student teaching text Criminal Laws, which is in its fifth edition, and is widely used in universities in the state of New South Wales.

Professor Brown has co-authored or co-edited 10 books, published 33 book chapters, and more than 100 articles in journals and in conference proceedings. He is currently working on two ARC grants - one on justice reinvestment and the other on comparative youth justice systems.

Professor Russell Hogg

Professor Russell Hogg joined the School of Justice and the Crime and Justice Research Centre from the University of New England's School of Law. He previously lectured at QUT in the areas of evidence, criminal law and criminal responsibility. He has published widely in the areas of criminology and criminal justice, including Policing the Rural Crisis, co-authored with QUT School of Justice Head Professor Kerry Carrington and Rethinking Law and Order (with Professor David Brown).

His current research interests include the racialisation of crime, punishment and penalty, violence and civilising processes, environmental criminology and crime and rurality.

Professor Hogg has had five ARC Grants over his career, the most recent being a three-year ARC research grant in 2008 for his work in Safeguarding Rural Australia: Addressing Masculinity and Violence in Rural Settings.

International Conference for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy

The Centre hosted the second biennial conference from July 8 – 11 2013, with over 130 international delegates attending. Five keynote addresses and 20 national and internationally respected speakers were invited as panel members to the conference. View the conference program here: <http://crimejusticeconference.com/past-conferences/2013-conference/>

Keynote addresses

Criminal Justice and Social Justice for Women: Legacy and Lore, Law and Legitimacy

Professor Loraine Gelsthorpe
University of Cambridge

Across different jurisdictions, lawbreaking by women differs from the lawbreaking of men in volume, nature, and seriousness, yet women's treatment is shaped by lore, myths, muddles and misconceptions about what is right, just, and appropriate. In this paper Loraine Gelsthorpe highlights the problematic relationship between the criminalisation and governmentality of women (within and outside the criminal justice system). Drawing on recent research on the criminalisation of migrant women, and on developments regarding provision for women in the UK, she examines the justification of claims regarding women's distinctive needs and claims for their differential treatment. She also examines how far the law itself accommodates (or should accommodate) the differential treatment between women and men, and more broadly considers the moral legitimacy of the pursuit of social justice for women

Crime, Justice and Inequality: Oh Canada, Where Art Thou?

Professor Walter DeKeseredy
University of Ontario Institute of Technology

Drawing on a Canadian context, this key note suggests ways of mobilising social democratic movements to address problems of crime, justice and inequality felt in many parts of the world. Since Canada's colonial beginnings, it has become increasingly more riddled with classism, racism, sexism, and a host of other highly injurious outcomes of structured social inequality. In 2006, however, many types of social injustice were "turbo-charged" under the federal leadership of the Harper government. The main objective of Professor DeKeseredy's keynote address critiqued the dominant Canadian social order and the pain and suffering it has caused for millions of people. Informed by left realism and other progressive ways of knowing, he also suggested ways of turning the tide and mobilising a strong social democratic movement.

'I Don't Wanna Grow Up': A Cultural Criminological Analysis of Resistance, from the 'Culture Wars' to 'Radical Iconography'

Professor Keith Hayward
University of Kent

Professor Hayward critiqued the enduring mythology surrounding "counter cultural" resistance within society generally and criminological theory specifically. Challenging established subcultural narratives about the "co-optation" of authentic forms of political resistance, and introducing the concept of "radical iconography", he suggested that nostalgic, ahistorical interpretations of past moments of resistance diminish not just the possibility of meaningful interventionist criminology, but of transformative politics itself.

Mugging, Riots and the Present Conjunction: Still 'Policing the Crisis'?

Professor Tony Jefferson
Keele University

In 1972-3, a moral panic about British 'muggings' was the starting point for a book, Policing the Crisis (Hall et al), that resituated the panic as symptomatic of a wider crisis of authority and the move towards a more coercive, 'exceptional' form of state. Published in 1978, it ended with these prophetic words: 'Liberalism...is in retreat. It is suspended. The times are exceptional. The crisis is real. We are inside the "law-and-order" state.' Policing the Crisis is about to be republished with a new Preface and Afterwords to remind new readers of the book's theoretical and historical provenance, respond to (some of) its critics and explore how different is the present conjunction, and whether, and in what sense, we can still talk of 'policing the crisis.' Professor Jefferson explored the book's legacy and contemporary relevance, especially in relation to crime, police and race relations, but also more generally discussed terms like 'crisis', 'conjunction' and the 'exceptional' state.

Professor Maximo Sozzo
Universidad Nacional del Litoral

In the last two decades, a significant growth of incarceration in South America has been produced, with some variations across national contexts. This punitive turn has been associated with the diffusion of neoliberalism as a political project in the region since the 1970s, both in authoritarian and democratic political regimes, with variations in its force and effects in each country. However in the last years emerged in several national contexts processes of decisive political change, linked to the ascendance of political alliances and programs constructed around the vocabularies of the Left, with important differences among them – from ‘XXI Century Socialism’ to ‘Kirchnerism’ - but always building a strong antagonism against the precedent diffusion of neoliberalism. Professor Sozzo explored the mutations of penal policies in this “postneoliberal” moment, under Left and Center-Left national governments, identifying continuities and changes with the recent past related to the hegemony of the New Right across national frontiers.

The continuing aim of this conference is to reinvigorate the intellectual and policy debates about the link between social justice, social democracy and the reduction of harm, crime and victimization. This is done through the alleviation of inequalities and building of more socially just and inclusive societies.

Two volumes of refereed conference proceedings were produced from the conference and can be found online: <http://crimejusticeconference.com/publications/>

Testimonials

"A fascinating conference, in which profound theoretical and empirical debates are combined with fundamental political and normative discussions about crime and justice in our present. An extraordinary space that promotes international, plural and critical dialogue." - Professor Máximo Sozzo, Universidad Nacional del Litoral, Santa Fe, Argentina

"This conference provided a unique—and refreshing—blend of creative exchange of ideas and an unfailingly welcoming and respectful environment." - Professor Elliot Currie, University of California, Irvine.

"The International Crime, Justice and Social Democracy Conference is one of the most important events in the world for scholars, students, and activists seeking new progressive ways of understanding and responding to some of the world's most compelling social problems." - Professor Walter DeKeseredy, University of Ontario Institute of Technology, Canada

The next International Conference for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy will be held at the Queensland University of Technology from July 7 – 10, 2015.

International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy

The International Journal for Crime, Justice and Social Democracy is an open access, online, blind peer reviewed journal with a distinguished international editorial board of 55 renowned academics from 14 countries. Professor Kerry Carrington and Professor Reece Walters are the journal's chief editors.

The journal publishes critical research about the challenges encountered by social democratic modes of crime control and criminal justice in the 21st century. The journal has released four editions since its launch with three printed editions and four special forthcoming editions for 2014 including New Horizons in Green Criminology, edited by Tanya Wyatt, Nigel South and Piers Beirne; and Organised Sexual Abuse, edited by Michael Salter. Following a successful first year of publication, and in keeping with its international theme, the journal will also have some articles translated to Spanish in 2014.

By the end of December 2013, the journal had over 17,291 abstract views and 11,336 downloads in just over 12 months. The journal can be viewed online: <https://www.crimejusticejournal.com/>

Website

The Centre website was launched alongside the Centre in December 2012. Since its initial design, the webpage has undergone a successful transition to the Central QUT format. The website is a key resource of information for both internal QUT staff and promoting the Centre externally. The homepage features a live Twitter feed, News and Events feed, the Centre's introductory video in addition to more in depth information relating to the Centre, the International Crime,

Justice and Social Democracy Journal and the International Crime, Justice and Social Democracy Conference.

The website has had a total of 807 views on the homepage as of 28 November 2013 with a growth in viewership since its integration into the centralized QUT format.

The Centre website can be viewed at www.cjrc.qut.edu.au

Social Media

The Centre's Twitter @CrimeJusticeQUT has successfully provided a social media platform to promote activities. We regularly tweet on staff achievements, upcoming events and had a live feed running for the duration of the International, Crime, Justice and Social Democracy Conference.

Tweets are posted three times a week and since its establishment which coincided with the Centre's launch, we have gained over 400 followers.

Seminar Series

The 2013 Centre Seminar Series program was successfully coordinated by Dr Kelly Richards. Presenters came from across Australia to present their research to staff across the University as well as to external colleagues from a range of relevant government and non-government organisations.

April 19 2013 - Professor Peter Aggleton, The University of New South Wales - "Young people, education and HIV: What have we learned, what needs to be done."

Professor Peter Aggleton presented the first Crime and Justice Research Centre seminar in April 2013. Professor Aggleton's presentation was a great success with a very interesting topic on HIV education internationally and within Australia.

Professor Aggleton has over 30 years experience working internationally in HIV, sexuality and sexual health. Since early 2012, he has held a Strategic Chair in the National Centre in HIV Social Research at The University of New South Wales. Professor Aggleton has published widely in his area of research with over 30 books and a number of journal publications and over 200 academic papers in this area.

31 May 2013 - Dr Jeremy Prichard, University of Tasmania- “Demand and Online Child Pornography.”

Dr Prichard is an interdisciplinary criminologist who publishes across diverse areas, including theoretical discourses in law and the social sciences, empirical research and policy. He is the Director of the Australian Clearinghouse for Youth Studies and a member of the Sentencing Advisory Council for the Tasmanian Attorney General

With continual advances in internet capability, the market for child exploitation material (CEM) is experiencing a boom in demand and supply, Dr Prichard’s research surveyed the research, legal and policy context regarding CEM. It argued that an important gap exists in both research and policy, namely consideration of demand reduction strategies.

28 June 2013 - Dr Michael Salter, University of Western Sydney- “Organised Child Sexual Abuse Networks.”

Dr Michael Salter is a lecturer in criminology at the University of Western Sydney. His work is focused on the impacts of gender-based violence and response to it at an individual and social level. He is currently a co-investigator on a Criminology Research Council funded study on ‘sexting’ and a study of violence and threat in the domestic violence sector funded by the Canadian Institute of Health Research.

Dr Salter’s seminar provided a critical introduction to the debates over organised abuse before going on to discuss the results of a qualitative study with adults reporting organised abuse in childhood.

6 September 2013 - Dr Matthew Ball, QUT – “Queer Criminology”

Dr Matthew Ball is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Justice, QUT and Visiting Fellow at the Centre for Sex, Gender, and Sexualities, Durham University. His research explores the intersections between sexuality and criminal justice.

His presentation explored the growing field of “Queer Criminology”. It charted the current state of the debate on ‘queer criminology’, and also considered some possible directions for the area. Through a critical analysis of the variety of calls for a ‘queer criminology’, the presentation opened a dialogue regarding the potential challenges a ‘queer criminology’ might face.

25 October 2013 - Professor Mark Halsey, Flinders University- “Youth Justice.”

Mark Halsey is a Professor of Criminal Justice in the School of Law, Flinders University, South Australia. He is the recipient of three successive Australian Research Council large grants.

Drawing on interview data, Professor Halsey’s presentation examines the combination of personal, situational and structural factors underpinning desistance from crime for a small group of young males interviewed since 2003. With reference to particular cases, a detailed account of “success” and “failure” in the desistance process is relayed and implications for policy are discussed.

8 November 2013 - Ms Signe Dalsgaard, James Cook University- “Empirical Research on Indigenous Justice in Greenland.”

Signe Dalsgaard is currently based at James Cook University where she is doing her PhD. Signe holds a BA in Social Education, a BA in law and a MA Hons in criminology and criminal justice. Her research interests lie within human rights and justice, with a special focus on rights and justice for Indigenous people.

Greenland is one of the best examples of an Indigenous people moving towards self-determination and independence within a western legal context. Despite the political developments in Greenland, there is a lack of acknowledgement and knowledge of Denmark as a colonial nation. Signe’s paper connected and compared the history of the Inuit in Greenland with that of the Torres Strait Islanders.

Higher Degree Research (HDR) Students

HDR Program

We ran a regular HDR training program with workshop sessions by a number of Centre staff and visiting adjunct professors. The Centre thanks Juan Tauri for organizing a number of the sessions to increase HDR involvement in the conference attendance and presentations. The sessions were inclusive of all Law Faculty HDR students.

- 13 March - Molly Dragiewicz - Tools You Can Use For Postgrad Students
- 27 March - Juan Tauri and Belinda Carpenter - HDR Writing Workshop
- 4 April - Adjunct Professor Jo Phoenix - Writing Book Reviews
- 23 April - Cassandra Cross - Applying For Jobs in Government
- 17 May - Ange Dwyer - Conference presentations
- 7 June - Juan Tauri and Belinda Carpenter - Presentations
- 14 June - Juan Tauri and Belinda Carpenter - Presentation Practice
- 12 July - Tony Jefferson - Free Association Narrative Interview Method
- 16 July - Julia Davidson - Researching Child Online Victimization
- 27 September - David Brown - Reflections on Research, Publishing and Grant Getting

HDR student – Natasha Papazian

"I attended some of the Crime and Justice Research Centre's workshops for the HDR students. The workshops ranged from effective research methodologies; post graduate options and applying for jobs; and preparing for conferences and the HDR colloquium. Guest facilitators included Professor Tony Jefferson and Professor David Silverman. The Centre encourages HDR students to produce their best work and played an important role in supporting me in writing conference papers for the Crime, Justice and Social Democracy Conference. The Centre has encouraged my academic development and learning."

HDR student – Elizabeth Rowe

"As a HDR student, the Crime and Justice Research Centre has given me access to interesting and thought provoking presentations through its seminar series. Alongside these presentations, the CJRC also offered valuable opportunities to become involved in the justice research community. I have developed academic and professional skills, and received support during the publication of my first peer reviewed journal article. The CJRC encouraged me to develop a range of skills including research methodologies, academic and professional networking, and effective conference presentations."

Our banner

In Oslo, Norway on 26 July 2011 around 100,000 people marched to mourn the slaughter of 77 victims murdered by Anders Breivik several days earlier.

"Most people at the event carried a single red or white rose.... The crowd raised their flowers together to Crown Prince Haakon, who said that "tonight the streets are filled with love."

Prime Minister Jens Stoltenberg also addressed crowds in Oslo saying: "By taking part, you are saying a resounding 'yes' to democracy." He said this was a "march for democracy, a march for tolerance, a march for unity", adding: "Evil can kill a person but never conquer a people."

This sentiment is what our banner, of single roses held high, symbolises.
