Enterprise Leadership:
Leading Ethical Organisations

Harness your leadership potential to build a positive culture with ethical conduct in your workplace.

How do workplaces build and sustain positive cultures? How do organisations and institutions develop ethical frameworks? Leaders of organisations with favourable ethical conduct understand how it is a product of the context and environment in which people operate.

Learn how your leadership behaviours shape this framework and techniques to build a healthy workplace culture and minimise unethical conduct risks.

Evolve with QUTeX

Prepare yourself to successfully charter complex ethical issues in today's workplace with QUTeX's Enterprise Leadership (ELP). Leading Ethical Systems gives leaders real-world tools and strategies to create an organisational architecture that builds a culture of integrity.

Core concepts

This course will immerse you in real-world situations to guide your understanding of;

- How context shapes individual and team behaviours;
- Why ethical breakdowns occur in organisations and institutions;
- The impact of personal awareness, values, and point of control on decision making; and
- Strategies to deal with complex workplace ethics.

Who should participate?

Leading Ethical Systems highlights the impact of leadership behaviour and choices on an organisation's ethical conduct. Team leaders and program managers will benefit from the tools and techniques presented in this course to minimise the risk of ethical workplace issues.

As part of QUT's Enterprise Leadership series, this course aligns to the Leadership competencies for Queensland. Call our team on 07 3138 6573 to learn more, or download the competency map.

Your expert facilitator: Dr Alistair Ping

Dr Alistair Ping is the Colin Brain Governance Fellow at Queensland University of Technology (QUT) and was previously awarded the 2002 Coral Sea Scholarship from the Fulbright Foundation to study corporate social responsibility trends in the USA.
His current research draws on the inter-disciplinary fields of moral philosophy, criminology, social psychology and neuro-cognitive science to address the question of 'Why Good People Do Bad Things?'.
